2 Grammar: Comparatives & Superlatives with Long Adjectives On my own · وحدي

المقارنة والتفضيل مع الصفات الطويلة

Comparatives & Superlatives with Long Adjectives. For longer adjectives (usually 2+ syllables), we use "more" for comparatives and "the most" for superlatives, instead of -er/-est. Short adjectives keep -er / the -est (cheap -> cheaper, the cheapest), and a few are irregular (good -> better, the best).

للصفات الأطول (عادة مقطعان أو أكثر)، نستخدم "more" للمقارنة و"the most" للتفضيل، بدلا من -er/-est. الصفات القصيرة تبقى مع -er / the -est (cheap ← cheaper, the cheapest)، وبعضها شاذ (good ← better, the best).

3 Reading: The Phone Debate On my own · وحدي

مناظرة الهواتف

Read the Reading Lab text again. Answer in full sentences.

Last week, Omar's class held its first real debate. The motion was simple: schools should ban phones. The teacher put a box on her desk, collected every phone, and locked the box. "Now," she said, "you have thirty minutes to argue about it."

Hamad's team argued for the ban. From his point of view, the real problem was attention: students check their phones every six minutes, and nobody can learn in six-minute pieces. He had evidence, a statistic from a study, and he spoke slowly so everyone could write it down. "A class without phones is quieter and more focused," he said. Noor's team disagreed. "Phones are not the problem," she said. "Boring lessons are a bigger problem, and they are more common than phones." Half the room laughed; the other half took notes.

Then came the counterarguments. Omar agreed partly with both sides. "A fair point," he said to Hamad, "but a ban does not teach us self-control. It only delays the problem until we leave school." The teacher wrote 'self-control' on the board and underlined it twice.

After the conclusions, the class voted, and Noor's team won by two votes. But the most interesting moment came after the bell. Nobody ran to the box. The students stayed, still arguing, still convincing each other. The phones waited quietly in the dark, and for once, nobody missed them.

1 What was the motion, and which team won?

2 What evidence did Hamad use?

3 Why did half the room laugh at Noor's point?

4 Give one argument for and one against a phone ban. Which is stronger?
